Numb. 1604.

The Daily Courant.

Saturday, April 5. 1707.

London, April 5.

The Concluſion of the Piece begun in Yeſterday's Courant.

THE 29th, being the Day when the Prince and Princeſs Royal were to be complimented on their Marriage, the Compliment which the King made them was accompany'd with a Preſent of Jewels of a great Value: And the Prince Royal preſented his Bride with a Casket fill'd with Brillants and Pearls.

The Tueſday following the Deputies of the Eſtates of his Majeſty's Dominions, had the Honour to compliment their Royal Highneſſes, and to offer them Free-Gifts. On the Thurſday there was a great Maſquerade under the Title of the 4 Quarters of the World. The firſt Company was commanded by his Majeſty and the Princeſs Royal, repreſenting Europe. The King was cloath'd in a Roman Habit, of Cloth of Gold, enrich'd with a great Number of large Diamonds. His Buskins were of the ſame Cloth, ſet with Brillants: And his Robe was of Flame-colour'd Velvet, lin'd with Cloath of Gold: He had on a Crown of Lawrel mix'd with Diamonds, and held an Imperial Sceptre in his Hand. 4 Heralds carried Faſces before his Majeſty. Her Royal Highneſs was cloath'd in blue Velvet imbroider'd with Gold, and with Labels of Cloath of Gold, wrought with Silver, and ſet with natural Flowers. Her Robe was of Flame-colour'd Velvet, lin'd with Cloath of Silver.

The Second Company was command by the Prince Royal and by the Matgravine Philippa, repreſenting Aſia.

The Third was led by the Margrave Philip, and by the Margravine Albrechte, repreſenting Africa.

The Fourth by the Margrave Albert and by the Counteſs of Wartemberg, repreſenting America.

All theſe ſeveral Companies being come into the King's Lodgings, the whole Maſquerade march'd by Companies to the Sound of Trumpets and beat of Kettle-Drums, into the great Hall, where were 2 Tables in the ſhape of Halfmoons, plac'd one againſt another. On the ſide of his Majeſty's Table an Amphitheatre was rais'd to the very Cieling of the Hall to place the Spectators; and none were admitted to enter without Masks. Overagainſt this Amphitheatre there was a magnificent Buffet; and at each End of the Hall were Galleries full of Muſicians, Men and Women, in Dreſſes repreſenting the Inhabitants of the 4 Parts of the World, who ſung the Praiſes of the Princeſs Royal, and were anſwer'd by a Symphony, mix'd with the Sound of Drums and Trumpets. When Supper was over they return'd into the King's Lodgings, where there was a great Ball.

The Officers and Pages who waited, were likewiſe all mask'd.

On Friday the King din'd in Publick with their Royal Highneſſes. And whenever his Majeſty din'd in State, the Sound of Trumpets gave Notice of the Healths that were drunk, and were anſwer'd by the Cannon.

On Saturday, his Majeſty, with the Princeſs Royal and the Margravine Philippa in his Coach, and attended by all his Court went to the Ring, and thence to his Royal Houſe at Charlottembourg: Where in Honour of her Royal Highneſs the Cannon were fir'd, and the Inhabitants of the Town had rais'd a Triumphal Arch. The King led the Princeſs into the Apartment appointed for her: And where there was a Toilette of Maſſy Gold, of which the King made her a Preſent.

On Sunday Biſhop Urſinus perform'd the Solemnity of conſecrating the Royal Chappel of Charlottembourg, in Preſence of his Majeſty and of all the Royal Family.

On Monday an Italian Comedy was acted, and the King went to the Town-houſe, where the Princeſs Royal was complimented in the Name of the Magiſtrates by M. Dankelman. 4 very large Jars fill'd with Wine, were preſented to her Royal Highneſs. There were Illuminations in all the Town, and that Night his Majeſty ſupp'd in the great Hall of his own Apartment.

On Tueſday there was a great Entertainment and a Mask; and no Precedency being obſerv'd at Table, becauſe every one was dreſs'd in Maſquerade, Lots were drawn for the Places which all took according as they had fallen to them. Her Royal Highneſs had the good Fortune to draw the King for her Partner, and he was in a Seaman's Dreſs, which had diſguis'd him to that Degree, that 'twas hard to diſcover who he was: Her Royal Highneſs was dreſs'd in the Spaniſh Mode, which became her to a Miracle. The King and whole Court return'd on Wedneſday to Berlin.

On Thurſday his Majeſty din'd in publick, and in the Afternoon being accompany'd by her Royal Highneſs went to the Repreſentation of a great Mask, in which there danc'd many Perſons of Quality of both Sexes, the Chief of whom were the Margraves Albert and Chriſtian. It was perfectly well perform'd: The Habits were well contriv'd, and ſuitable to the Perſons that wore them, Your Highneſs will ſee the Subject of the Mask in the Book which I ſhall have the Honour to bring you. The Prologue is written in Honour of the Princeſs Royal.

On Friday the King attended by the whole Court, went to ſee a Firework that had been long preparing. But the Wind being high the ſight was not ſo diverting as it would otherwiſe have been. I will not touch on the Subject of this Firework, becauſe the Additions deſign'd to the Book of the Mask I mention'd, will inform your Highneſs of each particular of it. This Day the King made her Royal Highneſs a Preſent of a Velvet Gown lin'd through with Sable: And indeed on every Day that was ſet apart for Diverſion, his Majeſty gave ſome new Tokens to her Royal Highneſs of his Liberality and Magnificence.

On Saturday the Court were at the Ring, and becauſe his Majeſty never ſits up late, he gave the Princeſs Royal Leave to have a Ball and Mask on Sunday; which Diverſion was continued almoſt every Evening after. On Monday the Great Mask was preſented a ſecond Time.

The King kept open Court on Wedneſday; and the next Day gave in the great Banqueting Room a Magnificent Entertainment call'd the Feaſt of the Spring. The Room was adorn'd with Looking-Glaſſes and Orange-Trees, and illuminated with above a Thouſand Wax-Tapers. There was a Gallery on each ſide, in which the Spectators were plac'd; and over againſt the Buffet was a Gallery fill'd with a Conſort of Vocal and Inſtrumental Muſick. There was a Table of Sixſcore Covers, and all drew Lots for their Places. The Praiſes of the King were ſung during the Repaſt; nor were thoſe of their Royal Highneſſes omitted. After this there was Dancing the greateſt Part of the Night.

On Saturday there was an Illumination that made the City of Berlin ſeem to be all on Fire. All ſtrove to outdo one another, and to make their Houſes be taken Notice of by a great Number of Devices,

Wax-

Wax-Torches, and other Ornaments. His Majesty went about all the Town, having in his Coach her Royal Highness and the Margravines. The Prince Royal was on Horseback with the Margraves, and all the Lords of the Court.

On Sunday there was a Ball at Court: On Monday the Mask was presented the third time, and in the Evening there was an Interlude at Court. His Majesty being desirous to close up all these Demonstrations of Joy by something very extraordinary at last, gave the Princess Royal the following Entertainment. On Tuesday the great Hall was adorn'd with Orange-Trees. All around it there was a Gallery hung with Looking-Glasses in the shape of Pilasters, that bore Garlands, set round with Wax-Tapers; and between the Spaces were Buns of Wax, set off with Drapery of different Colours. There were 30 Square Tables of 4 Covers each, representing a publick House: The Table appointed for his Majesty was in the Middle. A third Part of the Hall or thereabouts was hid by a Curtain of Flame-colour'd Taffeta. His Majesty came in first. Lots were drawn for the Places in their Royal Highnesses Apartments, who then went to the Hall together with the whole Court; each marching in the Rank his Lot had given him. The King met the Princess amidst the sound of Trumpets and Timbals, and plac'd her as his Partner on his Left Hand. At the End of the Table on the Right Hand of the King sate the Prince Royal; and over against him the Margravine Philippa. A Consort of Musick play'd all the while they were at Supper; which ended, all the Tables were taken away; and the Curtain being drawn up discover'd a Fair where there were 8 Shops finely adorn'd and furnish'd with Indian Curiosities, Jewels, Plate, Toys, and other Goods. The Shopkeepers were 8 Gentlemen belonging to his Majesty's Bed-chamber, cloath'd after the Mode of the Country from whence came the Goods they dealt in. In the middle of the Fair was a Mountebank's Stage. The Doctor had a Harlequin, a Scaramouch and his Wife to attend him, and deliver out his Packets; and all 4 of them, as your Highness may imagine, were Persons of Quality. They entertain'd the Company with the Praise of their Druggs, and offering to give them gratis, all were desirous to have them, and threw up their Gloves or Handkerchiefs, which being return'd to them, they found in each a Billet folded up; every Billet had a Number, which being presented to the Shopkeepers, they deliver'd the Goods which were beforehand mark'd with those Numbers: And by this Lottery, in which were no Blanks, the Shops were soon empty'd. The King intended this Piece of Generosity for an Acknowledgment to the whole Court of his being intirely satisfy'd with the Zeal and forwardness they had shown to second all his Majesty's Intentions in the solemnizing this Marriage.

Harwich, April 3. On Tuesday in the Afternoon, the Marlborough and Eagle Pacquet-Boats sail'd from hence with 3 Mails for Holland, and 120 Officers beside a great many Recruits for Flanders.

Margate, April 3. 'Yesterday my Lord Duke em-'bark'd, and taking 5 of the Men of War with 'him, and leaving the 3 others to Convoy the Mer-'chant Ships to Rotterdam, set Sail for Ostend. 'The Wind was contrary, yet there being but little 'of it, they were out of Sight this Morning. If 'the Wind do not rise very high they may reach 'their desir'd Port this Night.

'Last Night after my Lord Duke with the Men 'of War was gone, there came in a French Privateer, cast Anchor, and last here all Night, but in the Morning was discover'd. Six Boats with Men 'Arm'd were sent out after her; they took her after 'a hot Dispute, and are now bringing her in here.

Never perform'd but once,
